

Abstract

In order to improve movement control in an automation system for movement control, profiles (P) for movement control are freely defined via functions. Polynomial interpolations or spline interpolations are used for said functions, the interpolations being of a higher degree. The profile (P) for movement control has a command variable (L) and a secondary variable (F), at least one of which is time-based or position-related.